CARING FOR YOUR NEW PLANTS (HARDENING-OFF)

Our plants are grown in ideal conditions (greenhouses). These tender plants need tiny steps to acclimate to their new environment (hardening-off). They won't survive the extremes of the outdoors without your gentle guidance. Here is a hardening-off guide produced by the UW-Madison Extension.

- On a mild day (temperatures above 40° F), set your plants in a sheltered location with 1-2 hours of sunshine.
- Each day increase exposure to sunlight a few additional hours at a time, keeping them out of harsh winds, direct sun, and cold rains in early stages.
- As they strengthen, they'll will withstand stronger breezes and cooler rains.
- Gradually reduce the frequency of watering, but don't allow them to wilt.
- If temperatures below the plant's minimum are forecast, bring plants indoors or cover them to protect them from damage.
- After transplanting to your garden, water them with a weak fertilizer to get them growing again and to help avoid transplant shock.
